THE QUESTION OF THE DUCHIES.—The question of the Duchies is mainly a Dutch question. Nevertheless, it may be briefly stated. Some time ago, the Diet of Holstein were invited to examine the project of a new Danish Constitution, which, although liberal in certain respects, was subservient of the old rights of the Duchies of Holstein and Lauenburg, according to which, though acknowledging the King of Denmark as their sovereign, they were independent states, governed constitutionally by their own laws, like Hungary previous to the revolution of 1848. The new Constitution, the provisions of which are to apply to the dependencies of the Danish Crown, of whatever nationality, ignores these rights entirely. Well, the Diet of Holstein examined the project, as it was invited to do, and has flatly refused even to discuss the subject, until the independent position of the Duchies, as parts of the Germanic Confederation, is acknowledged by the Cabinet at Copenhagen. This the Cabinet at Copenhagen declares that it can't do. It avers that it has already made every possible concession. Austria and Prussia stand at the back of the Duchies, and Louis Napoleon stands about midway between the two disputants, with rather a partial eye on Denmark. Such is the question of the Duchies.

It is not likely that it will proceed to extremes, though the antagonism of Danish interests and feelings on one side and the German generally on the other undoubtedly renders the matter somewhat difficult of adjustment. But the consequences to which the slightest spark of war might lead are too terrible to imagine that it may by possibility be kindled. The French Emperor will see to that. He would stamp it out in an instant. His own power depends on his sleepless vigilance in this respect, among others, and he has never yet proved false to himself. It is understood that he has already instructed his Ambassador at Vienna to convey to the German governments his wish for a spirit of moderation in their transactions with Denmark, such as will permit of the solution of the question by diplomacy alone. It can hardly be doubted that the German governments will take the hint, and the question of the Duchies be settled at an early day by one of those felicitous compromises in which the continental diplomats take refuge when they can take nothing else.

The venerable Robert Walsh, writing from Paris to the New York Journal of Commerce, expresses the opinion that Russia "will avoid all community of position and relations" with England at Pekin. His opinion is founded on the assumption that Russia now has the start of England at Pekin, from whence he naturally infers that she would prefer to keep it. But, if we may credit the statements of a recent letter from St. Petersburg, this assumption would seem to be scarcely warranted. From these statements it appears that the authorities of the Celestial Empire have refused to admit the Russian Ambassador, Count Pontiatin, who attempted to proceed to Pekin by way of Maimet-chin and Oorga. In consequence of this refusal, Pontiatin is stated to have sailed down the Amoor to Nikolaiosk with the intention of embarking thence for Shanghai, where he will claim admittance a second time, and his demands will be enforced by a Russian squadron, which has just left Cronstadt under the command of Commodore Kuznetoff, bound for the Chinese waters. It is thus probable that Russia is in little better odor at Pekin than England is, and still more probable that Russian and English ships will soon be fighting side by side against the obstinate Celestials. Whatever may be the private wishes of Russia, it is likely that circumstances will at an early day bring her into hearty cooperation with England, France, and the United States, as regards the great aims of the present controversy with China.

Dr. Tate, of Virginia, who is understood to be about to succeed the present Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, arrived in Washington on Wednesday.

A BALLAD.

BY J. H. C.

[The fact versified in the following lines were originally published in the Trinity (Cal.) Times, and may be relied upon as authentic.]

Besone, besone ill-mannered hound;
What field hath sent thee here
To rouse me with thy dismal yell
Upon a night so drear?

Thus from his bed the farmer spoke,
Then turned again to snore,
But all in vain, the dog without
Howled louder than before.

And still the more the man complained
The brute the noisier grew,
And, leaping, shook the oaken door
As he would burst it through!

Then up at length the farmer rose
And donned his gear in haste,
There seems a mystery here, he yawned,
That should be fairly traced.

He drew the bolt, wide swung the door,
And, ere he could retreat,
A lordly mastiff bounding through,
Crouched, whining, at his feet.

Thence to the gate returning oft,
The intruder seemed to say
In eager phrase, "Come, come with speed,
And I will lead the way!"

This dog is mad, the farmer cried,
Or else some ill's abroad;
I'll forth with him; and soon they climbed
The winding mountain road.

Lit by the stars, where trackless snows,
Deep drifted by the wind,
Fill many a gorge, round many a cliff
Their dubious path they find.

At length the dumb guide panted and crouched,
With piteous eye and low,
Before a dark and stony heap,
Half buried in the snow.

Too late, too late! the farmer groaned,
As from the ley mold
He raised a form both tall and fair
But stiff and stark and cold!

Uniting Heaven's say for whose crime
She thus untimely fell—
Her name, her home, her errand here,
What mortal tongue can tell?

One scanty garment, frozen too,
Was all that wrapped her clay;
The rest, a bundle firmly rolled,
Untouched, beside her lay.

Alas! what crazy freak was this?

The astonished rustic cried,
To fling, on such a piercing night,
They warmest weeds addle!

While yet he spoke, the faithful dog
That bundle had unbound,
And in its folds, all plump and warm,
A rosy babe was found!

Oh, depth of a fond mother's love!
All self should resign
And calmly yield a ripened life,
Frail germ, to purchase thine!

Hence may I lean with firmer trust
On Him who vows to me,
"The mother may her child forget
Ere I be fate to thee!"

LOUISVILLE, September 35.

We noticed the other day that Prof. Rogers, of this country, was a candidate for the professorship of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow. Since then, we have seen with infinite pleasure the announcement of his election. In this choice the University of Glasgow, while enriching her Faculty with one of the brightest names in American physics, has paid a fitting and handsome tribute to the universality of science. It is something, in this age of oppugnancies, to feel that there is at least one great fellowship whose profound and delicate relations no State or party jealousies can sully, and which not even trackless oceans can divide.

We are gratified to notice that the reception of Professor Rogers by the scientific men of Great Britain has been not only warm but distinguished. He was present at the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, held in Dublin, in the early part of last month, and was the object of marked attention. The University of Dublin, on this occasion, conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws, an honor which signifies a vast deal more on the other side of the Atlantic than it does here, and subsequently, by special invitation, he was one of the members of the British Association, who visited the Earl of Rosse, of telescope fame, at Birr Castle, Parsonsontown, and examined the monster instrument with which that nobleman's name is linked in immortal fame. Our accomplished countryman, in short, has been covered with honors and besieged with courtesies. His advent has been welcomed with that hearty and graceful completeness in which Englishmen, when they undertake to be civil at all, are not surpassed by any other people on the globe.

Professor Taylor Lewis, in his new work on the Bible and Science, expresses the opinion that "the most acute astronomers have been not only practical but avowed atheists." The poetical proverb, "An undevout astronomer is mad," has never had much currency with the thinkers. The truth is, it is not the astronomer, who goes behind the curtain of nature, and busies himself with the mere machinery of phenomena, but the simple observer, to whom the wondrous spectacle of the heavens addresses itself with the noblest effect. The astronomer, especially the "acute" astronomer, is too apt to lose the glorious ensemble of the firmament, in the elementary principles which uphold it. It is a rare combination of gifts indeed which enables one to dissect the universe without expelling God—to take the great organ of nature apart, and still be ravished by its pealing anthems.

At the St. Louis fair, on Friday, in the first ring, L. L. Dorsey got the diploma for his mare, Mary Morgan; in the second ring, Charles Dorsey got the premium for his mare, Julia Morgan; in the third ring, E. Dorsey got the premium for another mare, and, in the fourth ring, J. H. Moore's (of Clarke) Belle Sheridan carried off the diploma.

The Boston Transcript says that "all things are mysterious to the earnest seeker." If this is true, we don't see any particular advantage in being in earnest. We suppose the Transcript holds that all preachers are jesters, all philosophers wags, and all knowledge a practical joke.

THE ST. LOUIS FAIR.

THURSDAY, Oct. 1.

"Mouth of my heart," as poor Willis Gaylord Clarke in one of his beautiful poems termed October, dawned upon this morning with a cloudless sky and a balmy atmosphere. Even before dawn the city was alive and stirring, and by nine o'clock the business streets were thronged with masses of moving, breathing humanity, such as we have never seen outside of Broadway, New York. The greater portion of the multitude appeared to be tending towards the fair grounds, and omnibuses, carriages, wagons with springs and without springs, carts, and even drays were brought into requisition by the eager crowd. We have never met with so many impatient and hasty people. We have never seen the ladies—sweet creatures—so utterly disregarded, and the convenience of self so prominent as to-day. The conveniences for reaching the grounds are fully deficient in all respects.

The fair grounds are about three and a half miles from the center of the city, and yet within the corporate limits. To get at them is one of the most difficult and disagreeable of possible adventures. We, however, made the journey satisfactorily in an over-crowded omnibus, in a hurly-burly procession of thousands of vehicles, through clouds of dust that were actually tangible, and were ushered into the gateway by a corps of gentlemen from the Republican office, to whom we are under peculiar obligations.

The grounds of the St. Louis Society are perfectly beautiful—more lovely and finished than at home. They embrace fifty-six acres of land, agreeably diversified by forest trees, and arranged in style. The hand of taste and cultivation is displayed upon every side. The walks are graveled, shrubbery is planted out, and from a score of fountains crystal water is thrown in lovely jets and falls with a soothing, delicious murmur. The amphitheater is larger than that of Louisville, and is decorated in fine style. But in the vast crowd that filled its thousands of seats we missed that beauty and grace and indescribable charm of feature and manner that so preeminently characterize the ladies who attend the Kentucky fairs. Missouri is a worthy offspring of our glorious old State, but she falls far behind the mother commonwealth in producing noble-looking women. We can apply to her that line of Horace—

"Filia pulchra, mater pulchrior."

The daughter is certainly beautiful; but the parent, how much more lovely!

Dusty and fatigued as we could not avoid being, we spent delightful hours to-day in walking over the grounds, and witnessing the varied panorama of life presented to our view. We found the Floral Hall an exact pattern of that at Louisville, and the display of fruits and flowers seemed to have been culled from the same gardens and orchards as those of the National Fair.

There is a fine exhibition of mechanical and agricultural implements, but a great deficiency in motive power. We noticed with pleasure that the Kentucky Harvester, of Miller, Wingate, & Co., was the constant center of attraction. Hundreds of steady farmers were continually congregated about it, and its beautiful movements caused frequent bursts of applause. Mr. James H. Miller, the senior member of the firm, was present superintending his popular machine. Dr. Goddard, of Munn & Co.'s works, Louisville, is also here, with a thresher and cleaner that is meeting with universal favor.

You have doubtless seen, by the full reports in the papers in this city, that old Kentucky has taken her full share of the liberal premiums. Wherever anything from our State has been entered, success has been the result. Kentucky horses and cattle can only be defeated in any match that may be instituted yet. Of course the numerous Kentuckians here have been elated with due State pride by these signal triumphs.

The display of stock at the fair has not been extraordinary, although several specimens of Missouri growth were remarkably fine.

The fair has been, in all respects, successful—the receipts of the gate averaging $5,000 per day. This has put the Directors in a good humor, and despite the popular panic relative to financial affairs, the Treasurer will doubtless balance his accounts with money in his purse.

Telegraphic dispatches from Louisville relative to the failures there have caused no talk save in the small circles of home folks here. The intelligence, however, has caused banks, brokers, hotels, and all sorts of brokers to refuse Kentucky money.

SE DE KAY.

A correspondence has taken place between our Government and that of England, concerning the possessions of the Hudson's Bay Company south of the forty-ninth parallel of latitude, and within the Territories of Washington and Oregon. By the treaty of 1846, the right of sovereignty over this Territory was declared to be in the United States. The Hudson's Bay Company assert that their rights of property are the same as before. Servants of the Company have put in claims to portions of this land under grants to settlers, made by our Government. The controversy must be settled by negotiations with the English Government.

Or readers will remember that some time ago William Hall was killed by Isaac Bridewell at Mt. Washington. Bridewell underwent an examination and was discharged. Last week a warrant was issued against him at Shepherdsville for the same offense. As soon as he heard of it he delivered himself up. The case underwent another examination, Captain Rousseau appearing as his attorney, and he was held to bail in $600 to answer. We learn that Bridewell, in the encounter with Hall, was severely wounded, from which he will probably never fully recover.

DESIGN FOR THE CLAY MONUMENT.—Mr. John W. Clark, Fourth street, is the agent for the sale of a beautiful engraving of the design for the Clay Monument at Lexington. It is elegantly executed and will make a fine picture. It is published by the Kentucky Publishing Association.

ARTESIAN WELL.—The artesian well being bored by Messrs Dupont & Co. has attained the depth of thirteen hundred and seventy-two (1,372) feet. The rock is a blue limestone, and the equivalent of the rock at Madison, Ind. They intend to continue their borings to the depth of fifteen hundred feet.

RIVER AND STEAMBOAT MATTERS.

The river had risen only an inch in the forty-eight hours ending last evening. Boats drawing only about four feet water were able to go through it. Our accounts from above are favorable for a rise. Heavy rains have fallen from Pittsburg down, and also all along the Kentucky river. The weather is very pleasant.

Funny Bullet.—This elegant steamer will leave for New Orleans from Cairo to-morrow evening after the arrival of the train. Passengers can take the 10 o'clock trains this evening from Jeffersonville or New Albany and reach Cairo in time to take passage on the Fanny. She has superb accommodations. Capt. Dunham, her commander, is well known as an experienced officer. Messrs. Judge, the clerks, are courteous gentlemen. Dick Moore, who leaves the cars to-day, enjoys the privilege, of the Fanny, of dealing out the refreshments "for the inner man."

The Atlanta.—One of the lightest and neatest of low-water steamers is the Atlanta. She leaves for New Orleans direct this evening. Passengers will find good accommodations on her.

The Gen. Pike, in charge of Capt. Fuller, also leaves for New Orleans to-day.

The Grapeshot.—

The telegraphic news is very important as well as interesting. The long-looked-for steamer Star of the West has at last arrived. The California elections had resulted in the success of the Democrats. Further Indian outrages are reported in Oregon and Washington Territories. Mr. Venable, U. S. Minister at Guatemala, is dead. The Anglo-Saxons have arrived at Quebec with three days later news from Europe. The financial intelligence from New York and New Orleans is favorable. A large banking house in St. Louis has suspended.

The failure of Mr. W. E. Culver, private banker, was announced this morning. He has made an assignment to Mr. Henry Dent. We understand that the amount held by him on account of depositors is about $174,000. Very few merchants deposited with him. The largest depositor was the Louisville and Frankfort Railroad Company, which had $42,000 in Mr. C.'s bank. The company is amply secured.

This failure caused some surprise, but no excitement. Everything is quiet. The brokers are buying the notes of the old Tennessee banks at 5 per cent. discount. The banks are checking for their customers at 2 per cent. premium.
